"The Border" ("Hranica", Slovakia, 2009) Film Screening

A documentary directed by Jaroslav Vojtek. It tells the story of Velke Slemence – a village split overnight in 1946 by the Red Army between USSR and Czechoslovakia. Barbed wire and a three meter high fence charged with electric power – mercilessly stretched between houses – divided land and families for several decades.

"In Between?" and the "In-Between Generation" – What Do They Mean Today? Lecture

Karolina Bielenin-Lenczowska, PhD

(Institute of Ethnology and Cultural Anthropology, University of Warsaw)

Drawing on her ethnographic research on Macedonian-speaking Muslims and descendants of Polish migrants in Brazil, Karolina Bielenin-Lenczowska will discuss the idea of the 'in-betweenness' applied in migration studies. She will discuss how people who are between the first and the second immigrant generations find themselves wedged in-between the ideas and values of their sending country and the recipient country, as well as in-between childhood and adulthood.
